Allied Restoration Company: There When You Need Us

Fire Remediation: Saving What Could Have Been Reduced to Ashes

As destructive as fire is, a professional restoration service may be able to reverse the damage done to furniture, personal property and even books and photographs. The quicker a team can respond to a situation, the better the chances of restoration.

At Allied Restoration Company, we offer complete fire remediation services. We will explain what we can restore and provide a competitively priced estimate.

We can also provide immediate drying techniques to combat any negative effects from the water used to extinguish the flames.

Smoke Residue Removal

The dangers of a house fire are well known. The dangers of smoke, however, are sometimes underestimated. Even after extinguishing the flames, smoke will linger in the form of a residue that causes more damage to property, creates odors, leaves discolorations and threatens the health of those who come into contact with the property.

Smoke residue removal is a critical part of Allied Restoration Company's fire remediation process. Our goal is to provide complete recovery from a fire—and that includes smoke remediation.

Smoke is a danger regardless of the size of the fire because it can easily spread throughout a building, even isolated fires area a risk.

Leaving behind more than just an offensive odor and discoloration of property, smoke can potentially be more destructive than fire itself. Acidic in nature, smoke residue will wear down finishes on furniture and create conditions ripe for another fire. Smoke also shorts out electronic components.

With the right experience and techniques, the recovery team at Allied Restoration Company is equipped and ready to respond to fire and smoke damage. We can apply immediate services to combat the degradation of property, restoring your home or business to its original condition.
